Objective^{1st}

SEO V PAY PER CLICK (PPC)

Customers often ask us to rate our efforts against PPC campaigns, there is no short answer and it is more than just a matter of cost. Briefly, to attain the same rankings as with SEO you will pay more over time. The difference is greater by a factor of three to four times, but more often by a lot more.

Competition for the key phrases you believe visitors will use to get to your site may create bidding wars. Our SEO optimises all search engines at the same time. To use PPC on more than one engine usually doubles the cost.

PPC also puts you at risk from fake clicks, it is estimated that in competitive markets, one in every five clicks are false, even using sophisticated filtering systems offered by PPC ad networks.

Having said this, we often recommend kick-starting the optimisation process with a pay-per-click campaign, because natural optimisation - as we like to term it - does take time to build. But, once SEO reaches a certain level, there is no need to spend money on web advertising apart from reminding audiences of your web presence. Traffic will arrive at your site anyway, almost by default, ensuring you are always on the shortlist, whatever the product or service offered. And all for a low, monthly maintenance charge.

Currently, www.originalcanvascompany.co.uk ranked 5th out of 6,910,000 in Google. We deploy 100 keywords and 70 rank on a page one listing with Google.

“Very pleased with the results, we have orders at 2am in the morning!”

WHERE USING 1ST OBJECTIVE IS A WINNER

We recommend SEO only as part of a carefully balanced marketing mix. Like any method of promotion SEO will die in isolation. And if your site's content is not relevant to your targeted visitors when they arrive, they're only a click away from your competitors' sites.

SEO's influence in brand building is often underrated by marketers but our expertise continually proves its value in the land-grab world of online marketing. In one example, start-up BackgroundChecking.com became the destination site – through SEO - for CV screening services and, in just 2 years, resulted in its successful sell-off to the information giant Experian.

'1st Objective's SEO made our brand the "home of CV screening", adding greatly to our multiple at exit'
